Understanding iCivics and Its Mission

iCivics was founded in 2009 by former U.S. Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor. The organization's mission is to educate students about the U.S. government and the rights and responsibilities of citizenship through engaging, interactive games. iCivics seeks to improve the civic knowledge of students nationwide, making learning about civics both enjoyable and informative.

The platform is designed to complement educational curricula and provide teachers with resources to enhance their lessons on government and civic engagement. By utilizing games and interactive tools, iCivics fosters critical thinking and encourages students to become informed citizens who participate actively in their communities.

The "Who Rules?" Game Overview

The "Who Rules?" game is one of the flagship offerings of iCivics, designed to help students understand different forms of government and the roles of various leaders within those systems. In this game, players explore the concepts of democracy, autocracy, and oligarchy by making decisions that affect the governance of a fictional society.

Players take on the role of a ruler and navigate through challenges that require them to make choices about how to govern effectively. The game emphasizes the importance of civic engagement and demonstrates how different leadership styles can impact the well-being of a community. Through this interactive experience, students learn about the complexities of governance and the significance of citizen participation in democratic processes.
