History of the Asian Business Association Los Angeles

The Asian Business Association Los Angeles was founded in the early 1980s in response to the growing Asian population and the need for a structured support system for Asian businesses in Southern California. The founding members recognized that despite the increasing number of Asian entrepreneurs, there were limited resources available to help them succeed in a competitive market. The ABA was established to provide a unified voice for Asian businesses, advocate for their interests, and foster community ties.

Over the years, the association has evolved, reflecting the changing demographics and economic landscape of Los Angeles. It has adapted its services to meet the needs of its members, which now represent a diverse array of industries, including technology, retail, hospitality, and finance. The ABA has played a pivotal role in shaping policies that affect the Asian business community, making it a respected entity in the realm of local economic development.

Mission and Vision of the ABA

The mission of the Asian Business Association Los Angeles is to promote the economic and professional growth of Asian businesses in the region. The association seeks to empower entrepreneurs through education, advocacy, and networking opportunities. Its vision is to create a vibrant and sustainable business community where all Asian entrepreneurs can thrive and contribute to the broader economy.

The ABA's core values include inclusivity, integrity, and community engagement. By fostering a culture of collaboration, the association aims to bridge cultural gaps and enhance communication among different business sectors. This commitment to community building is essential for driving economic development and ensuring that the voices of Asian business owners are heard in key decision-making processes.
