How Monkey Business Consignment Works

Monkey business consignment operates on a simple yet effective model that connects sellers with buyers through a curated marketplace. The consignment process allows sellers to bring in their gently used items, which are then displayed for sale in the store. When a sale occurs, the consignment shop takes a percentage of the sale price, while the remaining amount goes to the seller. This arrangement fosters a collaborative environment where both parties can benefit.

The Consignment Process

The consignment process typically involves the following steps:

1. Selection of Items: Sellers carefully choose items that are in good condition and have resale value.
2. Agreement: Sellers sign a consignment agreement that outlines the terms, including the percentage split and duration of consignment.
3. Pricing: The consignment shop often assists in pricing items based on market demand and condition.
4. Display: Items are displayed in the store, attracting potential buyers.
5. Sale and Payment: Once an item is sold, the seller receives their share of the sale after the shop's commission is deducted.

This streamlined approach allows items to find new homes while providing sellers with financial rewards. It also ensures that buyers have access to a diverse range of products at affordable prices.
