How Pay by Invoice Works

Amazon Business provides the pay by invoice option as a means for eligible businesses to purchase products without needing to pay upfront. Instead, businesses can receive invoices for their purchases, which must be paid within a specified period, typically 30 days. This approach not only allows companies to manage their cash flow more effectively but also simplifies the purchasing process.

When a business chooses to pay by invoice, the process begins at checkout. After selecting the desired items, the buyer can opt for the invoice payment option. Once the order is confirmed, Amazon generates an invoice that is sent to the registered email address of the business account. The payment can then be made through various methods, including bank transfer or ACH payments, depending on the company's preferences.
