When registering a business in New York, one of the first decisions you must make is selecting the appropriate business entity type. Each type has its own legal implications, tax obligations, and operational frameworks. The most common types of business entities in New York are:

- Sole Proprietorship: This is the simplest form of business ownership, where one individual owns and operates the business. There is no distinction between the owner and the business for tax purposes.
- Partnership: A partnership involves two or more individuals who agree to share profits and losses. Partnerships can be general or limited, impacting liability and management roles.
- Limited Liability Company (LLC): An LLC combines the benefits of a corporation and a partnership, offering personal liability protection while allowing for pass-through taxation.
- Corporation: Corporations are legal entities separate from their owners, providing the highest level of liability protection but requiring more regulatory compliance and formalities.

- S Corporation: Similar to a corporation, an S Corporation allows for pass-through taxation while maintaining limited liability, but it must meet specific IRS criteria.

Choosing the right business entity is crucial, as it affects your liability, taxation, and the complexity of your business operations. Consulting with a legal or financial advisor can help you make an informed decision based on your specific needs and circumstances.
