History of Vietnam National Economics University

The Vietnam National Economics University (VNEU) was established in 1956 under the name of the Institute of Economic Studies. Over the years, it has evolved into a prestigious institution that plays a crucial role in Vietnam's education system. The university was initially founded to train economists who could support the country's development in the post-war period. As Vietnam transitioned to a market economy in the late 1980s, VNEU adapted its curriculum and approaches to meet the changing economic demands.

Throughout its history, VNEU has been instrumental in supporting government policies and providing expert analysis on economic issues. The university has expanded its programs and research capabilities, becoming a hub for economic education and research in Southeast Asia. Today, it is recognized as a national center for training high-level human resources in economics, business management, and social sciences.
